A Reading comprehensionTHE LAND DOWN UNDER

Until he was fifteen, Marcos Rivera had lived in Cartagena, Spain. Then, just after his birthday, Marcos' parents told him they were moving. His mum had accepted a job as a Spanish translator – in Sydney, Australia. They were emigrating !

So what was it like? 'It wasn't easy to begin with,' said Marcos. 'I'd studied English for years, but it took me a while to get used to the Australian accent. At first, I couldn't make out what anyone was saying – it sounded like a foreign language! At school, I had more problems. I joined the football team, but they all played Australian Rules football – on an oval pitch ! Fortunately, I soon caught up with the rules, and I didn't stay feeling homesick for long. Sydney is very big and cosmopolitan, and really welcoming. There are immigrants of many different nationalities living here, and there are always lots of tourists. Now I've got friends from all over the world!'

Eva Santos, a seventeen-year-old student, has lived in Sydney since 2002. 'I felt lost at first. Australia is fifteen times bigger than Spain, but there are more sheep here than people! I'd heard some worrying facts from my dad, who's a biologist. Did you know that there are more poisonous snakes in Australia than in any other country? The wildlife here is amazing. Once, when I was walking to school, I came across a mud-skipper fish. They're really unusual, because they can leave the water for short periods of time – they can even use their fins to help them climb trees! Then there's the kangaroo, of course – Australia's national animal. I used to think all Australians kept one as a pet. That isn't true!'

So what have Marcos and Eva missed most about Spain? They answer with one voice, 'The food!' Eva adds, 'I don't mean to be rude. I've had some great meals here, especially at barbecues. But it doesn't beat Spanish cooking!'

And what's the best thing about Australia? 'The people are unbelievably friendly,' says Eva. 'I loved eating Christmas dinner on the beach,' says Marcos. 'Oh, and one more thing: getting 100 per cent in my Spanish exam at school!'
